Omega Technical Services Recruiting Team Supports United Way of Aiken County School Fundraiser

On Thursday, June 6th, the Omega Technical Services recruiting team donated and delivered school supplies to support the United Way of Aiken County "Stuff the Bus" fundraising campaign. The campaign is an outreach effort that provides much needed school supplies to local teachers in Aiken County, so they are not having to acquire them at their own expense. This effort also lends a helping hand to some children who may not have the resources they need to begin the school year. By focusing on these areas of need in our communities, we can ensure that our children are well prepared for the school year. These are our future leaders, and we want to do all we can to set them up for success!

A NOTE FROM BILL TINDAL TRANSPARENCY – AN OMEGA VALUE

One thing I had to get used to being part of Omega is the close relationship we have with our competitors. I can be competitive at times, and I love to win. But several of our competitors are also great partners. Always driving for an "I win – you lose" result doesn't work in this business. I see how leveraging good relationships with other companies leads to growing the business. But there are risks. Transparency can't be about sharing all information all the time. The competitors we trust know there are limits to what can be shared. And, they've always respected that position. They seem to appreciate that while we hide our sensitive business information, we don't have a hidden agenda. I also believe that making business decisions based on our priorities is essential to transparency. While we don't share the "sausage making", we do share the priorities used to make decisions. There's been a significant amount of change in Omega's business systems over the last several months. And a lot of hard work went into both deciding on, then implementing these changes. Most will never see the deliberation of options, evaluating new vendors, or the ironing out our strategies for implementation. In the same way, there is sensitive information that would be inappropriate to share broadly across Omega. Rest assured that we continue to make decisions based on our priorities first for the nation, then employee, then client, and then company. It's equally true that we can only meet our client's needs with a strong company. Successful clients require talented professionals and each of you are required to meet the nation's national security missions.

FOUR PART SERIES: SAFETY MONTH

Former FBI Agent, Rick Hill, conducted a training session on how to respond to an active shooter situation for the Omega corporate staff on June 13, 2024. Omega's remote employees and Program Management Offices also participated virtually. Mr. Hill's insights on how to survive an active shooter incident were extremely helpful and can be used in any environment. Whether in an office, shopping center, house of worship, or government building, everyone now knows that the simple technique to "Run, Hide, Fight" may save their lives.

As an Omega Technical Services team member, you can support and help grow Omega's online presence by visiting our profiles on Facebook and LinkedIn. To help with social engagement, you are free to like and comment on the posts, follow us, and share Omega's accounts with those you know! Sharing and supporting Omega is not just limited to our social media. You can also support us by exploring our website at www.omegatechserv.com, reading our monthly newsletters, and sharing your experience with Omega with your colleagues.

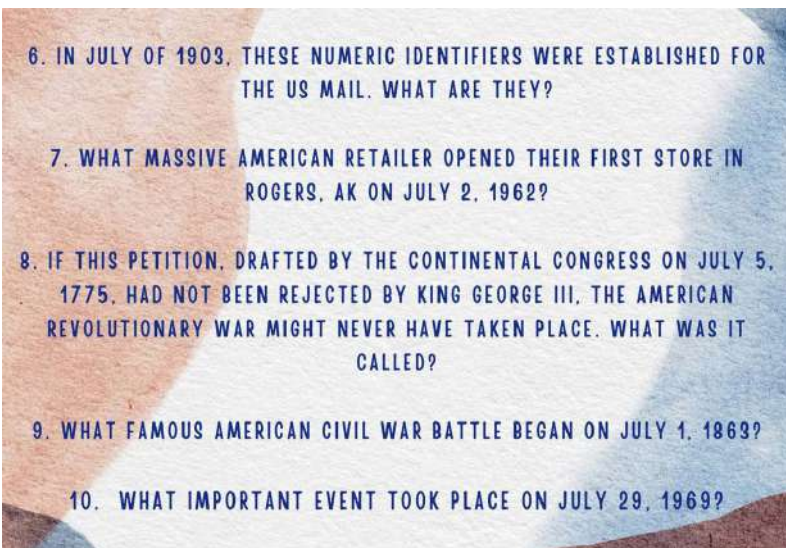

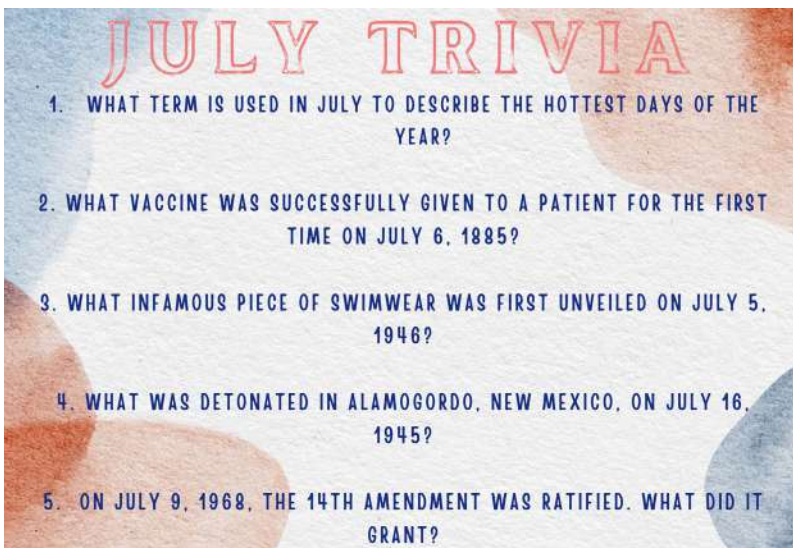

Growing a presence online through social media for a business can be difficult without the right research and planning. Before making posts on social media, we must understand the audience based on the demographics and when their activity is the highest on each platform. Facebook and LinkedIn all have varying demographics and functions on the apps that influence the reach of the posts. Using the platforms' highest days and hours of activity, businesses can find on average it yields the most engagements.

By doing these things, you are actively helping Omega reach a broader audience within the online world and showcasing new opportunities for prospective employees through an online platform. And for that, we thank you!

Reminder: Please ensure you continue to check your emails regularly for updates on Omega business systems transitions!
